

From: John Arends
To: Microsoft ATR
Date: 11/20/01 1:37pm
Subject: microsoft

I really think Microsoft has gotten off too lightly. It's gotten to the point where its impossible to do well in an academic setting without it. Due to Microsoft's domination of the market, students are forced to either purchase grossly expensive MS Office, or make illegal copies of it, just to pass classes in a university setting. Profs require powerpoint presentations, and oftentimes send word files to students, or require students hand assignments in word files.

Because of the domination, students have to keep buying office, and using windows, and just further microsoft's hold on the market.

Some serious changes need to be made with this company.

Thanks for your consideration.

John Arends
8039 Kenton
Skokie, IL 6007